2. I get daily emails when my kids are missing an assignment. Unfortunately, this is because the teacher has entered the heading for the grades but not the grades so I don't know if it is really missing or not. Then my youngest actually had a missing grade but we didn't know it because it always shows missing grades just because the teacher hasn't entered it yet. I would prefer for the teachers to not enter the heading for a grade unless they are putting the grades in so I can trust the emails I'm getting are legit.

My child at the junior high has a science teacher that never lectures just gives assignments through google classroom while in class they discuss his personal business. I have reached out to this teacher and he doesn't seem to take my emails serious. My child has straight A's except for this class that he nearly fails every nine weeks. This isn't okay! A child should change and grown so much throughout the school year that once a year reports is not sufficient and typically not an accurate measuring tool. There should be consistent feedback throughout the school. It shouldn't be initiated by the parents either.

2. I do what I want and half the teachers [REDACTED]
3. This differs. My first two years of school, with band and Mr. Collins as theatre director, I loved school and didn't mind keeping my grades up so I was able to participate. Junior year it started falling. Theatre was no longer taken seriously with the new teachers, and I have no more interest in being apart of the theatre arts program here. I had colorguard to keep me going, and then Senior year everything kinda dropped. COVID definitely didn't help, I'd say the first three years were fun. All of senior year I haven't been able to care about my education, and find it difficult to leave my bed in the mornings.

1. Yep but I'm dumb soooo yeah
2. Not at all. The classes offered are mainly core classes plus arts. I would've liked an Earth and Space Science class. Another foreign language course provided by the school would've been nice as well. I learned absolutely nothing from Spanish and could've been spending my time learning something I was interested in, like French or ASL. My Psychology and Sociology classes through TVCC have been a pain to take, and so far those, plus the Forensics course we never got to finish junior year, have been the only subjects related to my future job.

2. A student I know has been pushed to tears. They have received constant harassment from their classmates, no let up, no stop. The teachers do nothing, they say nothing to stop it. It's ridiculous. He has three more years here and he's terrified. REFORM. Reform this Twisted dark system, stop with these weak punishments, these students come right back and the harassment is worse. There is no respect for LGBT students. I've even heard homophobic comments from TEACHERS. The adults in this school who are here to teach us and provide a safe environment. You ought to be ashamed of yourselves, pushing students to thoughts of suicide. When will he feel safe? When will I go to sleep KNOWING that when I wake up, he'll be okay. When will I be positive that I won't wake up to a dead friend? When will you quit allowing students to push others around, when will the books stop being knocked out of his hands? When will he walk into a classroom ready to learn instead of facing awful, hateful comments? When will he worry more about his assignments than his bullies? When will you step up? When will the LGBT students of Rains be safe? I can't leave him here without a guilty conscience. Left to fend for himself when I've done nothing to protect him and future students just like us? So listen now and listen carefully. I've never been more worried for a friend's safety. Make him feel safe, make everyone like him feel safe. Make this a LEARNING environment, not a cesspool for harassment, nasty comments, and hateful people. No student should be SCARED of school, no student should FEAR other students. Stop turning your head, stop looking away. LOOK. Look at what you're allowing. Make a support system which allows students to tell when they've been hurt, he's scared to tell. He's scared to say their names, because he KNOWS they'll come right back and the harassment will be worse. I don't want to lose my friend over your carelessness. Reform. Save the LGBT students of Rains. Save my friend and save every student to follow. I shouldn't have to beg for this, yet here I am. I'm begging. Reform.
